CASSELL'S NEW FRENCH DICTIONARY

French-English and English-French

With a precise system for indicating pronunciation phonetically.

This practical dictionary contains more than 68,000 French entries and more than 40,000 English entries covering every-day French speech, idioms and idiomatic expressions, the best modern writings, recent scientific, commercial, naval and military terms, proverbs and proverbial expressions, and phrases found in the French classics.

Compiled from the best French and English authorities, all spellings are based on decisions of the French Academy.

Critical Review, Paris, calls it "the best French and English dictionary of ordinary size in existence."

Outstanding Features

- a complete and convenient list of French nouns of double gender, giving the various meanings of each with their proper gender
- a table of irregular and defective verbs and a list of their conjugations
- a special vocabulary of proper names in French and English

INTRODUCTION

To the student of French, it may be interesting to know that the first work designed to teach that language to foreigners was compiled by John Palsgrave, an English philologist, in 1530. He called his work "L'Éclaircissement de la Langue Française." Palsgrave dedicated his work to King

Henry VIII., who graciously condescended to give him the exclusive privilege of its sale for seven years. The book was designed for the use of Englishmen who wished to learn French, and might be classified as a type of dictionary. Two copies of it are in the British Museum. The book is used even to-day as one of the best sources that we have for the study of Early English words and phrases, and as such is invaluable to all students of Early English from the times of Gower, Chaucer, and Wyclif to those of Surrey and Wyatt. Naturally, Palsgrave was jealous of the prerogative granted to him by his Sovereign, and so he cautioned his printers, Pynson and Haukys, not to sell any copies of the book to any one except at his express request "lest his profit, through teaching the French tongue, might be diminished." The second work that aimed to serve the English as a guide to the French tongue was issued anonymously in 1570; the third, compiled by one Claudius Hollybard, was published in 1593, and the fourth, more important than the two preceding, was Randle Cotgrave's "Dictionarie of the French and English Tongues," published in 1611. Cotgrave's work has proved of great value to those who read the Early English writers, or such as wished to compare the changes that have occurred in the language, for it is a rich storehouse of Old French and English words. Cotgrave's work is not free from mistakes, but judged from the period in which it was issued, it is evident that the lexicographer exercised great care in his work, and a superior intelligence in its compilation. For that reason, the book is still frequently consulted by philologists.

The present work, edited by DR. ERNEST BAKER, altho based upon that done by James Boëlle, lately examiner in French in the University of London, with the assistance of M. de V. Payen-Payne, assistant examiner in French in the same Institution, and author of "French Idioms and Proverbs," is far superior to anything that has ever yet issued from the printing-press as a dictionary of the French and English tongues; for, not merely does it contain the pronunciations of words, indicated by a system that is universally accepted throughout Europe as the best system devised

Character of this Work. over there for this purpose, but because the work of revision has been most carefully done and the whole very thoroughly edited. Entirely reset from cover to cover in a larger-faced type than any of its predecessors and, in fact, than any other dictionary designed for the same purpose, this new work of Dr. Baker's commends itself as a practical advance in foreign linguistry. An examination of the vocabulary of the letter "A" alone shows an increase of more than 2,000 words in that section over preceding issues, and the Editor has included in this work hundreds of new terms brought to the front by the development of the arts of peace and the sciences, philosophy and commerce, as well as the arts of war. The spellings and pronunciations of the French terms are based upon the decisions of the French Academy as reflected in works issued under the direction of that august body, or in such as have recognized its authority but have been issued independently.

The French vocabulary will be found to reflect the literary language of the masters of the French tongue since the times of Molière, Bossuet, Fénelon, and Montesquieu in France, and Bacon, Shakespeare, and Milton in England. The inclusion of a large number of idiomatic phrases is a feature that makes a book of this kind invaluable to its possessor, especially as, in this case, both the French and the English idioms have been noted. In matters of capitalization and compounding, the systems applied by Claude Augé in the "Larousse Universel" have been followed.

Careful as all lexicographers are to make use of the most accurate means available to them for indicating pronunciation, the idea of pro-

Pronunciation. viding an international alphabet key made little headway until, in 1893, Dr. ISAAC KAUFFMAN FUNK, editor-in-chief of the "Standard Dictionary of the English Language," determined to provide one for the consultants of the work that has since become his permanent monument. In this book he introduced a chart of international sound equivalents in two pages that preceded the sections of Bibliography and Foreign Phrases, and there tabulated the values of the various letters of the alphabet in such a way that the reader might easily compare the sounds of the various letters in the leading languages of Europe.

It was not until some years later that the efforts of a number of Frenchmen to produce the alphabet of the International Phonetic Association bore fruit, and its genesis may be traced to the persistence of a French philologist, Michel Bréal, who was born of International Phonetics.

French parents in Landau, Bavaria, in 1832. This eminent scholar and philologist, who became Professor of Comparative Grammar in the College of France, and in 1875, head of the Academy of Inscriptions as well as Director-General of Public Instructions, was the moving spirit who, with the aid of the Abbé Jean Pierre Rousselot, founded, in the College of France, April 1897, a Laboratory of Experimental Phonetics. Rousselot, himself a leading French phoneticist, was born in 1846 in St. Cloud. He was among those who made use of the graphic method to indicate the most delicate shades of phonetic differences. He was appointed head of the Laboratory, and there concerned himself with applying a system of phonetic physiology to correct defects of pronunciation and of deafness. In collaboration with his nephew, François Laclotte, he published, in 1902, a treatise on French pronunciation. With the recording instrument invented by Rousselot, the movements of each of the phonetic organs during the emission of sound, or the modifications of different tongues, were traced on sheets especially prepared for the purpose of obtaining such records.

Paul Edouard Passy, French philologist, who was born at Versailles in 1859, became a firm believer in the phonetic method of teaching languages. In 1887 he wrote "Les Sons du français," a work that dealt with the formation of sounds in French, and with their combinations, etc., in the French tongue. This won fame for him in his profession, and he founded the Phonetic Association of Teachers of Living Languages. He became Assistant Director of the School of Advanced Studies, and since 1894 has taught general and comparative phonetics in that Institution.

The system for indicating sounds sponsored by the International Phonetic Association, and more commonly called Paul Passy's alphabet, now widely used to indicate pronunciation in phonetic dictionaries, has been found a satisfactory medium for the indication of sounds by symbols on the continent of Europe, and has recently won its way across the English Channel, being used by Daniel Jones,

M.A., Professor of Phonetics in the University of London, in a dictionary of 30,000 common English words and 12,000 proper names. This system is used in the present work because by applying it the Editors were able to indicate, with precision, the fine shades that exist in French vowelsounds, as between a and â, è and ê, i and î, and others finer still, and so mark the distinctions that must be made in pronouncing French words. This system consists of 81 distinct symbols and five signs (´; ¨; ~; |; †) employed as marks of stress, length, nasality, syllabism, and aspiration. Of the symbols, 51 are French and 45 are English, but of these the following consonants—b, d, f, h, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v, w, z—have the same value in each language. For a detailed explanation of the system used and the phonic values of the symbols, see KEY on pages x and xi.

The plan followed with the vocabulary is to group under each parent term its derivatives, related words, participles, compounds, etc., as well as those phrases that are inseparably associated with it, and follow these with the idiomatic English or French equivalents in each section respectively. Whenever a word has more than one accepted form of spelling, the less frequent form is referred to that currently accepted as in good use where the definition is given. Words out of strict alphabetical order, such as may occasionally be found in groups, are referred to their proper places by means of [SMALL CAPITALS] set in brackets as shown here. Also, all cross-references are indicated by the same method.

Whenever past or present participles are formed irregularly, as recevoir (pres. p. recevant; p. p. regu); or plurals of nouns, as, cheval (pl. chevaux); or feminine genders, as (fem. coquelucheuse), do not conform to the regular rules, and it is necessary to indicate them, they have been printed in a light black-faced letter and set in parentheses.

Parent terms are printed in heavy black-faced type, and a type of lighter face has been used for derivatives or related terms. The respective art or science or handicraft or trade to which a word belongs, its part of speech or its gender is indicated by a system of abbreviations printed in italic type. For an explanation of the Abbreviations used, see page xxiv.

An additional step in advance has been taken by the Editor in the department of Proper Names where, instead of following the track beaten by his predecessors of separating these into several groups, he presents them in one alphabetical order.

This is a concession to common sense, practical utility, and ready reference which enables the consultant of the book to obtain, with a minimum of effort and much saving of time, the French or English equivalent of any name in Mythology, Classic, Ancient, or Modern History or Geography, etc. In the Tables of French Coins, Measures, and Weights, American equivalents have been indicated wherever necessary, and the reader reminded of the instability of foreign exchange.

A critical examination of the text of this book reveals that the purpose borne constantly in mind by the Editor was to produce a work that should provide the greatest good for the greatest number, and this he has accomplished by eliminating all dead wood, and by adding many new terms that have won recognition in both the French and English tongues during the past quarter of a century. In addition, and with a discernment and discretion rarely exercised, a number of old French words that have returned to use and taken a new lease of life, have been included, together with the more important colloquialisms, and the best of modern slang, perhaps hitherto overlooked or deliberately excluded. Thus has the Editor provided a reliable guide for students of the French and English tongues in their relations to each other, and contributed a valuable addition to bilingual lexicography.

Consonants

CONSONANTS

The following consonants have their usual values in both sections of the Dictionary:—

b, d, f, h, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v, w, z.

“c” and “q” are not used for phonetic purposes: “y” is not used in the Eng.-Fr. section, and in the Fr.-Eng. section has a vowel sound as shown in list of French vowels.

g	as in Fr. dégager (dega'ʒe); Eng. game (geim).
j	„ „ Fr. rien (rjē); Eng. yellow ('jelou).
ŋ	„ „ Eng. bring (briŋ), finger ('fiŋgə).
ʒ	„ „ Fr. agneau (a'no), soigner (swa'ne).
ɪ	„ „ Eng. bird (bəɪd), sailor ('seilə).
ʃ	„ „ Fr. charme (ʃarm); Eng. shield (ʃild).
tʃ	„ „ Eng. cheese (tʃi:z), ditch (ditʃ).
θ	„ „ Eng. thin (θin), bath (bɑ:θ).
ð	„ „ Eng. thine (ðain), bathe (beið).
ʒ	„ „ Fr. engager (āga'ʒe); Eng. vision ('viʒən).
dʒ	„ „ Eng. judge (dʒʌdʒ).
hw	„ „ Eng. when (hwen), nowhere ('nouhweə).
ʒ	„ „ Fr. huile (ʒil), Gargantua (gargō'tʒa).
x	„ „ Eng. ugh (ʌx); Sc. coronach ('kɔrənɑ:x); Germ. ach (ɑ:x).

ˈ denotes that the stress is on the following syllable.

: denotes that the preceding vowel is long.

~ placed over a vowel-symbol shows that the vowel has a nasal sound, as in cancan (kɑ̃'kɑ̃), comte (kɑ̃:t).

l placed below a consonant denotes that the consonant is syllabic, as in devilish (devliʃ), flattening (flætɹɪŋ), muddler ('mʌdɹə).

The aspiration of French words with initial “h” is indicated by means of a dagger (†).

An asterisk (*) indicates that the word or phrase following it is obsolete.

TABLE OF IRREGULAR AND DEFECTIVE VERBS.

THE Imperfect of the Indicative, the Conditional, the Imperative, and the Imperfect of the Subjunctive, are wanting in this Table. These four tenses are formed as follows :

The imperfect of the indicative is regularly formed from the present participle by changing ant into ais, as : parl-ant, je parl-ais ; finiss-ant, je finiss-ais, etc.

The conditional has always the same root as the future ; so that the first person of the future being known, it is easy to form the conditional, as : je parlerai, je parlerai-s ; je finirai, je finirai-s.

The imperative is always regularly formed from the present of the indicative, by suppressing the pronouns, as : je parle, imperative, parle ; except in the verbs avoir, être, and savoir. The third person singular and plural of the imperative are always the same as in the present of the subjunctive, and belong to that tense.

The imperfect of the subjunctive is always regularly formed from the preterit indicative by adding se, etc., to the second person singular, as : tu parlas, que je parlas-se ; tu finis, que je finis-se ; tu vendis, que je vendis-se.

FIRST CONJUGATION

Infinitive.	Present participle.	Past participle.	Present.	Indicative Preterit.	Future.	Subjunctive Present.	English.
Aller	allant	allé	je vais, allons vas, allez va, vont	j'allai ¹	j'irai	aille, allons ailles, allez aille, aillent	to go.
Envoyer	envoyant	envoyé	j'envoie, envoyons envoies, envoyez envoie, envoient	j'envoyai	j'envoierai	envoie, envoyons envoies, envoyez envoie, envoient	t) send.

SECOND CONJUGATION

Irregular and Defective Verbs

Infinitive.	Present participle.	Past Participle.	Present.	Indicative Present.	Future.	Subjunctive Present.	English.

FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

A

A, a (a), n.m. The first letter in the alphabet of most of the languages derived from the Phœnician, including French and English. In French it has two sounds: (1) as in part, shown in this dictionary by 'a'; (2) as in pas, shown by 'a.' Il ne sait ni a ni b, he does not know B from a bull's foot, he is a perfect ignoramus; il n'a pas fait une pause d'a, he has not done a letter, a stroke; un homme marqué à l'a, the beau-ideal of a man, a first-class man.

a (a), 3rd sing. indic. [AVOIR].

a (a), prep. [see also AT, AUX].
